Stone the Heir does not readily lend itself to characterization; for want of a better term I call it a comedy-of-exaggeration fantasy, but I quickly add it is a fantasy without magic swords and scantily-clad, big-busted women. It is written in an archaic language of my imagination. While strolling through the woods one Spring day, Z. Hud Twadder, a man of much learning from the local village, tripped over something protruding from the earth, flew through the air and squonched into a nearby brook. Dripping up the brook bank he yanked and pulled on the object of his travail, and quickly saw it was some old hides with markings on them. Rushing home with his treasures and using a piece of rare glass which makes words appear larger, he found he could translate what was on the ancient hides. So begins the story of a race of kindly giants, the Gentlefriends, and Stone the Heir. King Pistil charges His Son, Stone and His two Companions, Throw, a man of the world, and Autumn, a mouse of the fields, to visit the Nations, carrying no weapons and bearing...
