Assuredly the Roman mission of Patrick was not a topic to be necessarily introduced by his panegyrist in a poem of less than one hundred lines. I have written the alleged silence; for, Dr. Todd will never be able to prove that the third stanza of this Hymn does not contain a reference, as explicit as could be looked for in a short metrical eulogy, to the fact, that St. Patrick received his mission from Rome, and was thereby made a participator in the mission and apostolate of St. Peter: --Constans in Dei timore et fide immobilis Supra quem aedificatur, ut Petrus, ecclesia: Cuj usque apostolatum a Deo sortitus est In cuj us porta ad versus inferni non prevalent. If the ordinary rules of Grammar apply to the interpretation of the second verse of this strophe, the most approved reading of which I have adopted, and if the third verse is to be received in its obvious sense, it can no longer be asserted by Dr. Todd that St. Secundinus is certainly silent as to Patricks commission from Rome. But as long as there is a legitimate doubt about this silence, which is the very basis of Dr. Todds argument, his statement that the Hymn of St. Secundinus makes no mention of Patricks mission from Rome, must be rejected as entirely false, or what suffices for our purpose, as quite unproved. Yet, as See Todd, Memoir, p. Hymns of the Ancient Church 313; and Moran,...
