GUITAR (selected poem from the book) You stare at me from across the room cracks forming in your belly I ve neglected you of late I m sorry But life has a way of creeping inside It's not your fault You are only as great as the hands that caress you and I ve been remiss But I can make you sing by rubbing your neck to ease the tension headache I can make you cry by touching you softly now harder as we move together I can make you whisper and yet growl like an animal in heat But one thing I cannot do is forget you.
